

December 9, 1949.

Dr. T. R. Hogness,
Institute of Radiobiology and Biophysics,
6200 Draxel Street,
Chicago 37, Ill.

Dear Dr. Hogness:

With reference to your letter of the 7th, I had quite forgotten what expression you had used, understood very well what you meant, and could not, in the context, have inferred any disparagement.

It seems to be the custom for prospective appointees to submit sets of publications, to form a basis for judgments, more or less along the lines of the contest between Aeschylus and Euripides in "The Frogs". I would be very glad to conform, if you would let me know whether to mail them, or bring them with me, or neither.

Sincerely,

Joshua Lederberg